It was written by the composition team of Tim Nichols and Craig Wiseman. The duo created the song based on family and friends who learned about diseases (cancers), and how they often had a new perspective on life when they learned they had little time. They decided to write a song based on the concept, hoping that it could inspire someone in such a situation. The lyrics of the song focus on experiencing life to the fullest, while becoming a better person. Released in June 2004 as the album's first single, the song became a huge hit in the US. He spent seven weeks at the top of the Billboard country music charts; the magazine later called it the biggest country song of the year. Live Like You Were Dying won several awards, including Single of the Year and Song of the Year at the 2004 Country Music Association Awards and the 2004 Academy of Country Music Awards and the 2004 Grammy Award for Best Country Song. The music video, directed by Sherman Halsey, was nominated for Video of the Year at the 2004 Academy of Country Music Awards. Sold more than two million copies in the American content Live Like You Were Dying tells the story of a man in his forties who receives the news that his father has an unspecified and life-threatening illness. His father's message is to live life to the fullest and do things he has always wanted to do, such as parading, climbing, fishing and riding on bulls. He also says he has become a better husband and friend. McGraw then changes the perspective for himself, talking about how to go fishing with his father ceased to be an imposition and how he finally, after reading the Bible, took a long look at his life and took advice from his father by going to paradismo, climbing, horse, bull riding, and more. This song is often associated with McGraw's father, Tug McGraw, who was hospitalized with a brain tumor on March 12, 2003. It was revealed that he had cancer. He died on January 5, 2004. [1] Background The song was written by Tim Nichols and Craig Wiseman. The pair had a friend who received a misdiagnosed medical diagnosis about a form of lung cancer. Wiseman and Nichols began discussing family and friends who learned about diseases, and how they often had a new perspective on life when they learned they had little time. They write a song based on the concept, hoping that it could inspire inspire in such a situation. [2] After they came up with the title, they began writing the first verse and chorus. [3] They found themselves connected to the song, and continued to write at the end of the night over the phone. [4] I remember going into my living room totally dark, lying on the floor, and we wrote the second verse on the phone, Wiseman recalled. The inclusion of the lyrics about riding a bull was planned as a kind of palette cleaning, as they felt that the chorus was getting too sentimental. The duo judged their creation as a really spiritual thing because it came strong. Tim's instincts and intuitions keep guiding us. [2] The song was demoed within a few days of its writing by Wiseman, and was chosen by McGraw to be its next lead single. Wiseman recalled that the song had personal significance to McGraw, who commented that he himself had gone fishing with his father before quadruple bypass surgery. The commercial performance Live Like You Were Dying debuted at number 36 on the Billboard Hot Country Singles & Tracks chart for the week of June 5, 2004. It peaked at #1 on the chart on July 17, 2004. [5] The song was certified platinum by the RIAA on December 1, 2009,[6] and sold 2,313,000 copies in the U.S. in July 2016. [7] Music video The music video features Tim McGraw singing in an endless cove with video clips added by CGI. The alternate version of the video, directed by Sherman Halsey, McGraw's usual director of choice, ends with a clip of Tim's father, the late Tug McGraw launching the final strike to the 1980 Philadelphia Phillies World Champion, who at the time was the team's only World Championship. The video was nominated for Video of the Year at the 2006 Academy of Country Music Awards.
